'The Harlequinade' Enchanting Play in Neighborhood

Miss Joanna Roos Makes Artistic Hit in Poetic Fantasy by Barker and Calthrop.

All the appealing poetic beauty and tragic pathos surrounding Columbine or her counterpart through the ages of the drama were made affecting reality last night in the Neighborhood Playhouse largely through the enchanting personality and natural talent of Miss Joanna Roos, who made her first professional appearance last night in the poetic fantasy, "The Harlequinade," by Granville Barker and Dion Calthrop. The audience sat fascinated through the highly imaginative bit of dramatic history of Columbine, Harlequin, Pantaloon and The Clown.

The cast was one of excellence, but Miss Roos, who played the part of Columbine, was the outstanding figure. She was a member of Miss Yvette Guilbert's dramatic class and is a product of the amateur opportunities furnished by the Neighborhood Playhouse, of which Miss Guilbert was an honorary director during her recent long stay here.

"The Harlequinade" is described by the author as "not a play at all, but an excursion," and such it proved to be, but an excursion of a most unusual and appealing sort, starting back in the classic days of antiquity, passing through the Middle Ages, the Renaissance, the philosopher, as the characters and the nearer shore of the River Styx as the setting. And thus it became known to the audience that the play was not a play, but a poetic fantasy.

Those characters dear to every dramatic age were brought down through the centuries into the magic world shown period of the day after to-morrow and placed back again on the shore of the Styx in a personally conducted tour through the centuries. The tour was conducted by two strange but fascinating characters: Uncle Edward (Whitford Kane) and Alice (Miss Roos).

The way they took the spectators into their confidence furnished half the charm of this whimsical conceit. Uncle Edward and Alice worked the curtains and told the audience what was going on, and where they were, with ingenious charm, prepared the audience for the strange things that it was to behold in the life history of Harlequin and his fellow players, and the audience was not disappointed.

The book and lyrics by Harold Atteridge and Edward Delaney Dunn, which may or may not have run true to form and rhythm, were in the hands of the original, in the least of its words. The production is laid in one of those semi-mythical kingdoms—Vandalia or Vantania, where the gods are in the hands of the gods. Harlequin and his followers from Olympus were merely on a week-end trip, and the audience was not disappointed. 'The Last Waltz,' BY STRAUS, LAST WORD IN MUSICAL COMEDY

Soaring Harmony and Brilliant Effects Captivate First Night Audience.

THE CENTURY THEATRE—"THE LAST WALTZ"—An opera with score by Oscar Straus, book by Harry Fender, lyrics by Harry Fender, adapted for the American stage by Harold Atteridge and Edward Delaney Dunn. The production by Lee and J. J. Shubert of Oscar Straus's opera, "The Last Waltz," which drenched the Century Theatre with soaring harmony and brilliant effects last night, was so superb that even the flowers showered upon Miss Eleanor Painter, the star, were splendid. Down to the last detail, it was a masterpiece of musical comedy, and a large part of the reason why it is so successful is due to the frequently dashing, sometimes tender and always dazzling score provided by the Vienna composer of the "Chocolate Soldier," who to Pantaloon, Pantaloon is Charon and Momus is The Clown.
